

Churchill, Hitler and Stalin Work Together

Chaplin Plays the Muse

When the British soldiers returned from war on the Continent and compared notes with British Intelligence in Britain, they suddenly felt very sick. The British Intelligence chiefs woke up in 1945 and realised they had been had, that the war was an arrangement, a fallacy, a pre-organised hoax with goals well defined before WWII ever broke out. This led to personal disillusionment amongst many high-ranking soldiers who then refused to talk about the war – the tight-lipped, big-eared generation, as indicative of determined survivors (large noticeable ears), who were bitter about their responsibilities (tight-lipped).

British Agents – Adolf Hitler and Dr Theodor Morell

Hitler's doctor, Dr Theodor Morell, was a British agent, Freemason, secret Tibetan Lodge member and 'Vril' practitioner, placed there by King George V and VI. These were all qualities he shared with Adolf Hitler, although Hitler denies the Freemasonry connection.

'Vril' was the life force as taught in Tibet to Gurdjeiff, who taught Hitler's dentist, Dr Friedrich Krohn and Professor Karl Haushofer, both of them Hitler's primary spiritual mentors in the occult. Vril was so popular as a concept in the early 1900s, it led to the brand name 'Bovril' – 'Bovine and Vril'. Karl Haushofer's son Albrecht was the Duke of Hamilton's lover, who was the Duke of Kent's lover, who was King George VI's brother.

Dr Morell was offered a position as doctor to the Shah of Persia. This is a tell-tale sign that he was a British agent, as the Shah of Persia was a British hostage, allowed to function, but completely under British rule.

Dr Morell had been a doctor on board elegant trans-Atlantic liners between Hamburg and Buenos Aires and was a fashionable dermatologist at the Berlin Tennis Club, making him something of a VIP. Although he was recognised and well received by high society (he was a short fat curio), the opinions of his colleagues and historians were that he was a complete