

Lost Leaders

If you want to study history, you need to follow the murders.
The history of war – for instance – is the study of mass murder.
It is mass murder that makes history and culture that makes home.

War is the destruction of cultures and homes.
The primary target for the destruction of the home is the man with integrity.

We call this man husband and hero.
Traditionally he takes care of the animals and protects the region.
Without him culture is as malleable as clay.

It shouldn't be so surprising that Hitler was a British agent. Not only was he completely supported by Churchill and Stalin (they sabotaged attempts to kill him), but the same pattern is repeated over and over again in war today.

Two of the groups that tried to kill Hitler were the Black Orchestra (Schwarze Kapelle – German intelligence) and the Red Orchestra (Rote Kapelle – communist intelligence). Both, the Black and the Red Orchestra were prepared to risk their lives to kill Hitler. As such, both groups should have had the support of Churchill and Stalin. Instead both groups were sabotaged by Churchill and Stalin.

The Black Orchestra constituted the only anti-Nazi resistance movement in Germany and had the best access to Hitler as they worked within Hitler's ranks. They were in constant contact with Churchill, but Churchill refused to return their calls.

Churchill, on the other hand, took the less effective Red Orchestra more seriously and assisted them occasionally. The Red Orchestra were communist intelligence who wanted to kill Hitler on behalf of Stalin, but would always be less effective than the Black Orchestra.

As part of the Russo-German Non-Aggression Pact (23 August 1939), Hitler asked Stalin to surrender the Red Orchestra. These were all highly trained and motivated German, French, Belgian and Dutch spies. In a fit of ambivalence Stalin ordered the Red Orchestra to Moscow by rail to receive medals. When they passed through Germany the Gestapo sealed off an entire train station and had them all shot. So perished the best Intelligence service the Russians ever had in the West.
